

I believe that having a backup radio for field operations is more prudent than requiring the manufacturers to engineer and build field repair friendly radios. I have found that the cost of equipment is much more competitive today than in years past and most likely the cost of “spare parts” would probably compete with the cost of an additional rig. Please deny this request.